

Pasta Point of No Return

Synopsis

A hungry young man is lured into a nest of vicious meatballs by his lunch, and taken out by the godfather of Italian entrees.

Pasta Point of No Return is a hilarious short film shot on location at De Anza College and featuring startling special effects all accompanied by a pounding soundtrack.

The Filmmakers

Studio Moraine creates films with a unique flavor. They are not afraid to tackle any subject and consider themselves an alternative to 'old school' production houses. They believe in equal opportunities for all filmmakers and lovers of cinema, and ask only two things of their partners: a passion for film excellence and the technical skills to achieve it. Studio Moraine is synonymous with quirky characters in strange worlds living the dream.

Jason Goodlin plays the doomed young meatball lover. He is currently studying filmmaking at De Anza College.

Neil Baker wrote the story and created the meatballs. Neil has directed one feature and numerous shorts, and has four new feature projects in development for 2006 including Stiletto, an action thriller (www.StilettoMovie.com), and Daisy Chains, an original horror film. Neil is one of the unseen geniuses behind Studio Moraine, the other being Paul Gill who helped to produce this short.

Jackie Marr co-directed the short. She was a student at De Anza and now works for Trans Video based in Mountain View as a production assistant.

Chetan Patil co-directed the short. He has directed several other shorts and a music video.
